Community Planning and Design Firm Glatting Jackson Opens Denver Office Expands Services to Meet Growing Demand in Western U.S. and Canada

Denver, Colo. – Keeping pace with the rising demand for urban transportation solutions, transit-oriented development, and re-creation of urban places, Glatting Jackson Kercher Anglin recently announced the opening of its newest regional office in Denver.

The Orlando-based community planning and design firm picked Denver because of the city's commitment to transforming itself into a transit-friendly metropolitan hub. Denver and the entire Front Range is fast becoming a model for the nation with its focus on the new-energy economy and the creation of physically active and healthy communities.

“We are perfectly aligned with Denver as a nationwide leader in urban redevelopment and sustainable transportation,” said Colorado native Troy Russ, AICP, a principal with Glatting Jackson. “We have worked with public and private clients in the western U.S. for many years, and this new office allows us to better serve our clients and build opportunities in other markets as well.”

The office, located in Denver's historic LoDo at 1523 18th St., is led by Russ, who is joined by planners Karen Nozik and Jessica Osborne, and urban designer Rebekah Kik.

The Denver team is currently managing a variety of public and private transportation and urban-design projects along the Front Range and in major cities throughout the west, including Albuquerque, N.M., Santa Fe, N.M., Sacramento, Calif. and Edmonton in Alberta, Canada.

“We're thrilled to be based in Denver to continue our commitment to planning and designing livable communities in Colorado and throughout the western US and Canada,” Russ said.
